Greetings and welcome to the Fall 2007 edition of AKRONews, the annual newsletter of the Department of Sociology at the University of Akron.

This is the start of my tenth year as Department Chair, and as you might imagine, I’ve written a fair number of these sorts of columns over this period. The ones I’ve penned are pretty similar to the ones I’ve read from others - a focus on last year’s accomplishments, especially in research, of faculty and students. It certainly is great to read about how many books and articles were written, how many grants were funded, and who won this or that award. Indeed, much of this is in the rest of the newsletter - one indication of how very worthy these achievements are. This year’s column is going to be a bit different, as I’m going to focus a bit on the impact that our Department has had on the lives and careers of our undergraduate students.

One of the questions that sociology faculty typically get from prospective and current majors is: “What Can I do with a Sociology Degree?” (Parents often ask us the same question!). This is part of the reason that we created our “Collage of Success” (http://www3.uakron.edu/sociology/collage/index.htm) last year. We wanted to provide a clear visual indication of all the places that our sociology degree has taken students across the years. This question, however, also prompted into another venture. Shortly after I became chair, we began a yearly event, targeted at our undergards, called (you guessed it): “What Can You do with a Sociology Degree?” Once a year we invite 4-6 grads back to campus to talk to our students about their careers and how sociology has helped them. When we asked our alums to speak on this, we mainly thought that they would focus on the impact that sociology as an academic and intellectual enterprise had on their careers.

Although the substance of sociology plays an important part in their narratives - especially in terms of learning about different groups of people, almost to a person our alums have repeatedly mentioned two key factors as critical to their success: research methods and writing. The former is not unexpected, as our methods courses provide important skills in collecting, evaluating and analyzing data, skills that come in handy in a fair number of careers. Surely this is part of why virtually every sociology department requires one or more courses in methods.

The importance of writing should also be obvious, but wasn’t so clear to us is the degree to which we emphasized it in our curriculum, especially as compared to what other majors in cognate fields require (recall that the old axiom that the last thing a fish notices is water). For some time, our department has required that at least one-third of the grade in all sociology courses except intro has to come from writing (many courses, of course, require even more). Although most of our undergrads going through the program may not realize it at the time, writing this much in 10 or more courses typically has a pretty positive impact on one’s writing skills. One recent grad’s story was particularly illustrative: he was one of 100 applicants for his first job, and was told that, after the initial interview, which included a writing test, they would narrow the field to 30 applicants who would be brought in for a second interview. A week later he was offered the job - without a second interview - because his writing was that much better than everyone else’s, an ability he traced directly to his courses in sociology. A story to warm the heart of a department chair...

Enjoy reading the rest of the newsletter - thanks again to Dr. Baffour Takyi and Cindy Saylor for putting this together.
MEET OUR NEW ASSOCIATE CHAIR

Dr. Kathy Feltey

This is my first semester serving as Associate Chair of the Sociology Department. So far, I am learning a lot about the challenges of class scheduling and short deadlines. It is always a juggling act for faculty to conduct research, prepare and teach classes, mentor students, contribute to the larger discipline (through our professional associations, such as the American Sociological Association or Sociologists for Women in Society), and participate in the service work that keeps an academic department moving forward. Balance is ever elusive in our profession! I’ve been trying to practice more yoga and meditation this semester and I have the poem below taped over my desk as a reminder. Wish me luck!

Poem about Meditation ~ Thich Nhat Hahn
To meditate does not mean to fight with a problem.
To meditate means to observe.
Your smile proves it.
It proves that you are being gentle with yourself,
that the sun of awareness is shining in you,
that you have control of your situation.
You are yourself,
and you have acquired some peace.

MEET THE NEW DIRECTOR OF GRADUATE STUDIES

Dr. Rebecca Erickson

This, too, is my first semester as Director of Graduate Studies, though I’ve benefitted from serving on the Graduate Committee under several very capable previous Directors: Drs. Gay Kitson, Cheryl Elman, and Rudy Fenwick. I thank them all for their fine work in establishing a smooth-running graduate program.

This is a busy year for the Graduate Committee, as we have to prepare for an external program review (it is our turn at bat) and also to work with our partner department at Kent State on a proposal to formally join our M.A. programs. In addition, the entire faculty is hard at work preparing as many as 10 doctoral candidates for the job market in the next two years - quite a lot for a program of our size. As you might imagine, with this many students about to leave us, the Grad Committee is busy expanding our recruiting efforts to continue to attract a diverse and quality cohort of our new students.

FLAME OF LOVE GRANT: An Overview

New Grant to Promote Interdisciplinary Study of Godly Love

UA Emeritus Professor of Sociology Margaret Poloma, Stephen Post, President of the Institute for Research on Unlimited Love, and UA Associate Professor of Sociology Matthew Lee, were recently awarded a $2.3 million grant from the John Templeton Foundation. The title of their project is, “The Flame of Love: Scientific Research on the Experience and Expression of Godly Love in the Pentecostal Tradition.” Godly Love is defined as the dynamic interaction between divine and human love that enlivens benevolence. This interaction provides the conceptual frame for a scholarly investigation of the Great Commandment: love for God and love for neighbor as self. Although this command finds expression in many religious traditions, The Flame of Love project limits its investigation to the broadly-defined pentecostal tradition. This tradition includes historic Pentecostal denominations, neo-pentecostalisms found in mainline and independent congregations, as well as others who adhere to a pentecostal worldview in which the Holy Spirit is deemed an active force in daily life. This three-year study is a joint venture of the University of Akron and the Institute for Research on Unlimited Love (www.unlimitedloveinstitute.org).

The grant will fund interdisciplinary projects such as in-depth interviews of exemplars of Godly Love, a national survey conducted by UA’s Bliss Institute (under the direction of Distinguished Professor of Political Science John Green), six additional sub-projects at $150,000 each to address specific issues within the broader topic, two Summer Institutes that will provide mentoring to young scholars, and support for scholarly publications of the highest quality. A group of twelve prominent scholars drawn from theology, religious studies, and social science - referred to as the Institute Core Research Group - will collaborate in the creation of the qualitative and quantitative data collection instruments. This group will also publish books and articles to provide a foundation for a new interdisciplinary field of study: the science of Godly Love. This project has the potential to be as important for the next century as William James’ The Varieties of Religious Experience was for the last one.

FALL 2007 GRADUATE STUDENTS
Angela Adkins, Jonathan Butler, Daniela Jauk, Marquita Mitchell, Daysha Lawrence, Valiant Logan, Jelena Pokimica, Michael Rickles, Suzanne Stachel, Jennifer Steele

Angela Adkins-I graduated from the University of Akron in the summer of 2007 with a BA in Sociology and Anthropology, and I began graduate studies in the Sociology Department this fall. My research interests are primarily in social psychology and the impact of technology on society. Making the transition from undergraduate to graduate student has certainly been a big change. I discovered quickly that setting priorities, good time management, and a different approach to studying are extremely important. The faculty, staff, and other graduate students in the department have been exceptionally welcoming and helpful to all of us in the cohort of new students, and I am excited to be part of such a supportive and dynamic program. There is much to learn on the road ahead, but I am looking forward to a great experience!

AKD NEWS Update
AKD would like to thank everyone who attended the banquet for making it a successful event. The 2007-2008 representatives are:

The new AKD officers were elected late last spring. They are: David Skubby, president; Mary Laske, vice president; Teresa Huzyak, secretary/treasurer; Lynn Clark, service chair; Marie Bozin, social chair; and Brittany Buffington, photographer.

Since summer, AKD has been successful at securing a speaker for the spring banquet. Robin Simon, Ph.D., has accepted our invitation to present her research and to attend the banquet on April 11, 2008. Dr. Simon is currently a faculty member in the sociology department at Florida State University. Her research interests include social psychology, mental health, and marriage and family.

The first faculty-student mixer was held in September at the Barley House in downtown Akron. The event was a great success, with a large turn-out!

AKD has also finalized plans for the annual silent auction, which will be held on March 7, 2008, at the Barley House in downtown Akron. AKD is currently accepting donations! As always a portion of the proceeds will be donated to ACCESS, a local emergency shelter that helps homeless women and their children. Last year, AKD was able to donate $500 to ACCESS. We hope to match, if not exceed, that amount this year!

In an effort to promote cultural development, camaraderie, and acknowledgment of graduate student and faculty achievements, AKD has also been distributing a bi-weekly newsletter to the department. Additionally, to help to develop a stronger association with the sociology department at Kent State University and to encourage the growth of a joint culture, Kent’s and Akron’s AKD newsletters are jointly published in both departments. Both sections of AKD hope this newsletter will become a tradition.

Lynn Clark. Since September, I have been participating on a Strategic Planning Committee working on creating a county-wide Reentry Network for offenders being released from prison. The purpose is to try and achieve a level of coordination and cooperation amongst and between the different organizations and agencies that provide services specifically to released offenders or may offer services that ex-offenders may find useful. All of the major criminal justice agencies are involved and diverse others who do not focus on that population but do provide needed services.

My Reflections: Marie Bozin

Marie Bozin is a first year PhD student in the Sociology Department. She completed her bachelor’s degree in psychology, with a double major in Sociology, in 2005. As an undergraduate, Marie was in the Ronald E. McNair Post-Baccalaureate Achievement Program, the University of Akron Honors Program, the University of Akron Psychology Honors Program, the National Honor Society in Psychology (Psi Chi), the Mortar Board National College Senior Honor Society, and the Golden Key International Honor Society.

Marie has continued her involvement in campus organizations as a graduate student. She currently holds the positions of Social Chair and Student Representative for Faculty Recruitment for the International Sociological Honor Society (Alpha Kappa Delta/AKD). Marie is a member of the national Sociology for Women in Society (SWS), and serves as treasurer for the local chapter. Marie is also a member of the Graduate Committee for Research on Women (GradCROW), the American Sociological Association (ASA), and the North Central Sociological Association (NCSA).

While a student at the University of Akron, Marie has received various awards and scholarships. She was a recipient of Honors Recognition Scholarships, the AmeriCorps Education Award, the Junior Fellow of the American Academy of Political and Social Science, and the Outstanding Woman Student Award. As an undergraduate Marie presented her research at several national conferences, including the 2005 Sigma Xi Annual Meeting and Student Research Conference and the 2006 Annual American Psychological Association Conference in New Orleans. She made her first presentation as a graduate student at the 2007 Joint NCSA-MSS Meeting in Chicago.

Marie’s specialty areas as a PhD student are criminology and gender. She is currently finishing her Master’s Thesis which investigates the role that type of placement may have in juvenile delinquency in foster children.

UNDERGRADUATE STUDENT NEWS

“DO SOMETHING” IN CLASS

Many of the courses you'll take as a sociology major challenge you in ways you never imagined. At the end of the course, some may be thinking “if only I could do something to change society.” The Department of Sociology's course, Social Inequalities, is precisely one of the courses that leave students wanting for a solution to the world's disparities. When Dr. Robert Peralta taught the course early in his career at the University of Akron, he saw students feeling helpless and wanting to do more to help make a difference. One student in particular, Peggy Phillips, took it upon herself to actually DO SOMETHING. She planned and implemented a book drive to help a school in New Orleans that was devastated by Hurricane Katrina (Peggy is pictured here with the high school's principal).

Because of Peggy's success, Dr. Peralta decided to create a project for students to "do something" in the course. Students were divided into small groups and each group had to decide on a "do something" project. Each student needed to log at least 10 hours of volunteer work for a social equality promoting cause. Dr. Peralta said that students were intimidated by the project at first due to... the time it would require of them and the group aspect of the project. However, once students completed the project, Dr. Peralta said students found the project rewarding and many planned to continue volunteering at their chosen sites.

Dr. Peralta described some of the outstanding projects that developed out of the assignment. Some of those were done with agencies such as Haven of Rest Homeless Shelter, a Social Outreach Trip that helped the homeless at Chicago area soup kitchens, and education services such as Strive Towards Excellence (STEP), and Tutoring Nurtures Talent (TNT). When reflecting on the assignment, Dr Peralta said “It was gratifying as an instructor to see students take part in the community and the rewards they felt they received from giving.”

ALUMNI SPOTLIGHT: Jenny Liljeberg (BA in Sociology, UA-2003)

Jenny Liljeberg (formerly Pszonowsky) recently accepted a position at the prestigious Brookings Institution (http://www.brookings.edu). Based in Washington DC, this independent, nonprofit research organization has been influencing public policy for over 90 years. Ms. Liljeberg applied for an entry-level job, but because they were so impressed by her abilities and previous experience, a new job was created specifically for her. She was gracious enough to take time out of her busy schedule to answer a few questions for the Sociology Department newsletter.

What have you been doing since graduating from the University of Akron?

Since graduating from the University of Akron in 2003, I moved to Washington DC, where I worked as a Political Action Committee/Grassroots Coordinator for the American Society of Cataract and Refractive Surgery, a non-profit, medical sub-specialty organization. It was during this time that I became involved with legislative and regulatory issues in the health care field. These experiences inspired me to pursue a graduate degree in Public Policy with a focus in global health and medical policy. I have become particularly interested in health information technology and provider quality assurance issues. This past Spring, I graduated with a Master’s Degree from the George Mason University School of Public Policy and I began my job with the Brookings Institution a couple of weeks ago. I work in their new Engelberg Center for Health Care Reform, which is led by one of the most renowned minds in the field, Dr. Mark McClellan.

In what ways did your experiences at UA help prepare you for graduate studies and your current job?

The most important experience in my undergrad degree was the opportunity to do an advanced research project in the Sociology Department’s undergraduate research program. It was an amazing and challenging opportunity that culminated in a co-authored paper entitled “‘Project Truth’ Versus the ‘Nanny State’: Tobacco Industry Front Groups and the Ongoing Struggle for Ownership of the Social Definition of Crime,” which was presented at the international meetings of the Law and Society Association in 2003. That project was an extremely demanding experience that definitely jump-started my interest in doing research and writing. It also helped me in obtaining the PAC/Grassroots position right after graduating from Akron because of the credibility that came from having my work presented on an international level. It also helped further develop my research and analytical skills on a much more demanding level than is expected traditional undergrad level courses.

What advice would you give to current sociology students at UA?

The best advice is to always try to exceed your own potential, and make sure you have a good network of friends, family, and mentors to motivate you. Also, work harder than what is expected of you. It may not always seem worthwhile, but it will pay dividends in the future. Everyone reaches a point in their collegiate career when life gets overwhelming, but if you stay focused on your goals and work hard you can achieve more than you might initially expect. In my case, the job offer from Brookings was an amazing reward for what I had worked so hard to accomplish over the years.

What are your future plans/goals?

In the next year or two, once I have definitively narrowed down a subject of interest, I will pursue a doctorate in Public Health, or Public Policy. When I started the Master’s Program in the fall of 2005, I set myself the goal of having my Ph.D. by age 30. I plan on continuing my employment with Brookings while I work on my doctorate. Once I have accomplished that goal, I plan on obtaining my EMT-I, and then my EMT-P. I would like to work/volunteer part time as a Paramedic. I have always enjoyed the challenge and the “think on your feet” intensity of being an Emergency Medical Technician and I hope to pursue that in a part-time career in the field of emergency medicine. Overall, my goal is to help with the development and implementation effective policy on a federal, state, and/or local level, while continuing my involvement in my local community as an EMT.
